ABSTRACT

A data management system for cataloguing product components and their 5   compatibility with various products includes a processor, a database containing component and product data, and multiple supplier interfaces receiving product identifiers from a central administrator, creating component groups, assigning the product identifiers to compatibility groups within those component groups, and creating associations between components and the compatibility groups.